THE MAKING OF A MAN. By the Rev. J. W. Lee, D.D., $vo, pp. 372. Cassell Publishing Company.

This book in one gives its author a place, and no mean place, in the world of contemporary thought. It is one of the truest, keenest and most brilliant studies of man in relation to the universe that have appeared in this country for years. In its insight and wealth of thought, it is not unworthy to be ranked with the best work of Huxley or Spencer, and in the beauty of its literary form and breadth of treatment it need not fear comparison with Emerson at his best. While the author does not shrink from any of the difficult problems in regard to man and his relation to Nature, he does not find it necessary to throw his religious faith overboard in attempting to solve them. There is a freshness, a virility, and a joyous note of faith running through every one of the seven chapters of the book that of themselves would arrest attention. In touching on the deep questions of human life and destiny, he exhibits a quiet confidence that comes, not of ignorance, but of wide knowledge and deep thought. The gravamen of his whole argument is that the laws of nature are but terms we use to define the operations of mind. To believe the forces of nature self-determined is to believe them rational and intelligent, which is not possible. The universe and the phenomena by which it manifests itself to our consciousness are not ultimate facts. Both the universe and man, its highest and noblest creation, are but manifestations of a mind inconceivably beyond our understanding. Thus only can we account for what is.

If matter is fundamental, then it were better to be a scientific and eloquent than a man; for they have more of the fundamental stuff of the universe in their bodies, and their brains generate none of that subtle something called mind, which perpetually asks questions that have no answer, and which, if fundamental, then we should trust our faculties in proportion as they are animal, and deny them in proportion as they are mental. Then the Nero's and the Caligulas were more rational in their sins than the Cæsars and the Washingtons in their virtues.

Mr. Munroe always writes interesting stories, filled with stirring incident, but in this case a long residence in Florida, where he spends part of each year, enables him to give a still greater interest to the story.

ADVENTURES OF SHERLOCK HOLMES

By A. CONAN DOYLE, Author of "Micah Clarke," etc. Illustrated. Post 8vo, Cloth, Ornamental, $1.00.

Deeply attracted by the study of crime, the hero of this remarkable series has adopted his income from the sale of his stories and his strange intuitive powers in solving out those cases, and clearing up those mysteries which the police had abandoned as hopeless. The narrative of his exploits as an amateur and unofficial detective is related in Mr. Doyle's most engaging manner, and is full of absorbing interest.
